HISTORY

Human occupation is severely limited in hot and arid environments such as Monument Valley, but archaeologists have recorded more than 100 ancient Anasazi sites and ruins dating before A.D. 1300. Some of the rock art portrays hunting of game for survival - Big Horn, Antelope and Deer. Like other areas in the region, however, the valley was abandoned by the Anasazis in the 1300's. No one knows when the first Navajo settled in Monument Valley. For generations however, Navajo residents have herded sheep and other livestock and raised small quantities of crops. Monument Valley is a small part of the nearly 16 million acre Navajo Reservation, and its residents are but a small percentage fo the Navajo population of more than 300,000.

SCENICDRIVEATMONUMENTVALLEY

A 17 mile unpaved loop road winds through the park. Along the way are 11 scenic stops including John Ford's Point, Totem Poles, Artist's Point, North Window and Three Sisters. The beautiful rock formations have been filmed in many blockbuster films, best known for John Wayne western films. Drive with care and respect for Navajo families who still reside within Monument Valley.

MISSIONSTATEMENT

The Mission of the Navajo Parks and Recreation Department is to protect, preserve and manage tribal parks, monuments and recreation areas for the perpetual enjoyment and benefit of the Navajo Nation – the spectacular landscapes, buttes, canyons, clean air, diversity of plants and wildlife, and areas of beauty and solitude.

TRIBALPARKS

With over 17 million acres, the Navajo Nation encompasses the entire northeast quarter of the state of Arizona, and spills over into New Mexico and Utah. Vast areas of pristine wilderness, majestic canyons, high mountain meadows, dry deserts, flatlands and blue skies characterize the land of the Navajo people. Mid 20th century Navajo leaders recognized the need to preserve and conserve these lands for future generations for their enjoyment and spiritual well-being, and, in accordance with Navajo custom, to welcome visitors from all over the world.
